

Curtis is a senior systems developer specializing in storage. He has over fourteen years of UNIX kernel development experience, five years of e-commerce and web design including founding a startup company, five years of software engineering management, two major software projects that have been released into Open Source, and five years of involvement in standards body working groups including chairing the IEEE Computer Society's Storage Systems Standards Working Group.

He has experience developing virtually all aspect of storage including journaling filesystems, clustered and distributed filesystems, logical disk volume managers, removable media management systems, RAID subsystems, disk drivers, failover clustering software, SANs, backup packages, kernel TCP/IP networking, TCP/IP protocol design, distributed applications, and web-based e-commerce applications.