

Tenth NASA Goddard Space Flight Center
Conference on Mass Storage Systems and Technologies

in cooperation with the

Nineteenth IEEE Symposium on Mass Storage Systems

The Inn and Conference Center
University of Maryland, University College
April 15-18, 2002

We now have the ability to create more data and at faster rates than ever before. This ability to create new digital content has started a revolution in information technology, with myriad technologies for storage, processing, and networks rapidly evolving to meet information system needs and requirements. This conference will look at these technological evolutions from a storage-centric point of view to present a roadmap of how they will impact the development and deployment of information storage and retrieval systems. This conference will give attendees a glimpse into the future from an engineering view rather than a marketing view, and will highlight the expected evolution of data storage technologies over the next three to five years. A Vendor Expo, however, will also feature commercial products and capabilities. Organizations interested in reserving space for the Vendor Expo should contact Ben Kobler at 301-614-5231 or kobler@gssc.nasa.gov. Space will be assigned on a first come first served basis.
